"Lengworthy's Old Rye" has created, as the play bills say, quite a sensation. The last that we have seen relative to it, is the following from the Warrenton Whig:-

'On the morning of the 221 of last August, about eleven o'clock, we received from Mr. W. A. Hart, of Alexandria, a most beautiful bottle of what purported to be inside about "one pint" of Longworthy's Catawba Brandy. The news of the arrival of this individual soon spread through Warrenton, and so great was the desire to test it, that three of our most particular friends, after much binting on their part, were invited by us to "taste and try." As they had hinted, of sourse they went, when called on. One of them was from Leesburg, one from Richmond, and the last, but by no means the least, was from the quiet little village of Alexandria. Now all of these places are as much noted for good whiskey and good whiskey drinkers, as Salem town is for its renowned "Ginger Brandy." Suffice it to say, each gentleman took a pretty g a d horn, and | Race Ginger; 20 boxes Ground Ginger; 20 boxes as a matter of politeness, we telt it our duty show our bespitality by joining. Alexandria shook his head and remarked that he had his doubts as to its being Brandy-to speak plainly be was quite certain it was whiskey in disguise. Richmond said he knew it was Brandy, that Alexandria had never drank anything else in his life and which have been selected with great care, and was not a judge Leesburg argued with are offered on pleasing terms to prompt paying Rehmond, and Alexandria was voted out .-We respectfully, but modestly, went with the majority. Rehmond soon after, went out of town, (report says was carried,) Lessburg did the same. By accident, we met Alexandria that evening late; his face was red, that part about his eyes; we could'nt see the rest for his whiskers. When asked, from politeness, to go down with us and try again, deelined, saying, he had enough. Time passed on: strange rumors were started in Alexandria; people said that the brendy was a humbug. Hart, never willing to deceive, asked Stabler t : analyze the liquid. Result-old rye whis key, sweetened with brown sugar and burni! Hart, in disgust, has given up the agency -And now, in parting, while of course we take back our puff, if Mr. Hart is desirous of parting with his damaged stock, we have only to say that we will take two dezen bottles at bulf price, believing that it is good enough brandy for u-! And oh! what a consolation it is for her numerous friends and relatives to believe that she has but exchanged the fleet and transien pleasures of earth, for the lasting and eternal glories of heaver. That confidence, which, while on earth, she reposed in the promises of Jesus, did not forsake her on the dying couch; even while lingering on the threshold of her earthly tabernacle, she seemed to catch the heavenly inspiration, and to behold in her dying vision that brilliant diadem of glory which sparkles upon the brow of the Son of Man. As she had lived, so did she pass away, conscious that when her spirit should leave her body, it would be transported by angels into the Paradise of God. Miss Page was a member of the Pre-b, terian Church, in Warrenton, and in the absence of her pastor, Mr. Pugh, a most appropriate and elo quent tuneral sermon was preached by the Rev Mr. Pollock.
